Position Paper

Delegation from Indonesia
Position paper for The International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea

I- Maritime tensions and conflicts : discussing, cooperating and securing.

The Republic of Indonesia believes that it is essential to have international rules toward the exploitation and the use of seas and oceans. Those maritime areas represent around 70% of our planet. Therefore, we estimate that this space has to be for a good part common but it's also important to have exclusive economic zone for countries. Not only, in the past, we've seen some country controlling a large part of it, which led to an incalculable power but also to a lot of conflicts. Which explains the desire of maritime areas. We are an archipelago composed of over 1700 islands. Indonesia is the largest archipelagic state in the world with a maritime area of 5.8 million square kilometres. For a matter of fact, we believe that our maritime policy is one of the most important. Today, we have a willing to rebuilt our maritime culture as well as to expand the economy. We believe the waters surrounding our country have an enormous economic potential. Moreover, Indonesia is so well situated, in the equator, between the Indian and Pacific oceans. Around 40% of the worldwide traffic go through our waters. But all of this also means vulnerability to illegal logging and fishing, smuggling and piracy. It is also a zone suffering of a lot of conflicts. In the South China Sea, the tensions includes China, Taiwan, Vietnam, Malaysia, Brunei and Philippines. But since most maritime routes go through this sea; it becomes an international problem.

Today, Indonesia is the largest emerging market economy in the Southeast Asia. Thanks to our resources we've become major exporter of a lot of products all around the world such as petroleum and natural gas. In 2021, we've exported 228 billion USD. But our maritime economy still relies a lot on sectors like fishing and aquaculture. In order to develop, Indonesia has cooperated with countries like China. But there are tensions about the Natuna sea which are suppose to be Indonesia's but China keep occupying and exploiting it. This conflict affects our economical and political relationship. So we try our best to keep China at bay. We can compare this conflict with China to the South China Sea dispute. Because in both, China revendicates marine areas that aren't officially theirs. In 2016, the Vietnam Association of Maritime Environment and Nature and the Union of Science and Technology Associations of the city of Hai Phong organized a seminar in order to debate on the security of the South China maritime zone. But solutions proposed didn't take in consideration the political aspect that much. We also struggle a lot against piracy, even more in waterways like the Malacca strait. It is such an important strait but also vulnerable. In order to fight against those pirates and robberies, we've gradually stepped up our maritimes presence. But the lack of resources for the national defence and security haven't work in our favor. And even though, Indonesia does not take part in the South China Sea dispute, we are still a vulnerable country and our maritime concerns about security don't stop to piracy, we are also concerned about illegal fishing, logging and smuggling. The Indonesian Navy has an agreement with Malaysia and Singapore in order to have an aerial surveillance on the Malacca strait. This respects the UN Convention on the Law of Sea of 1994 which gave the safety administration to those three countries.

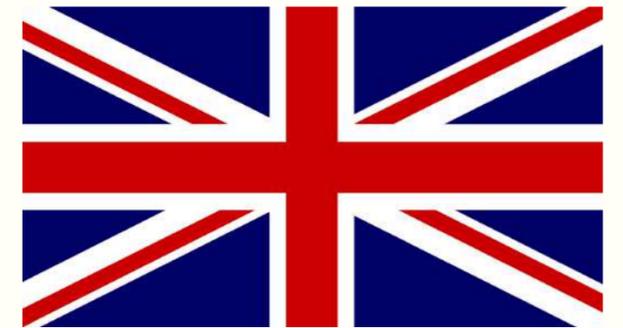

Indonesia advocates that an agreement with all the countries of South Asia is much needed. Because if the tensions keep going, a war could break out which would be a disaster for everybody. This should take for example the Montego Bay Convention but with the idea to make it much more specific. We propose to share fairly and proportionally this zone. An another idea would be to make the zone of claim a common maritime area for all of those countries. This would includes limited right to exploit the resources of the zone and to admit the right for all to cross this region. This would take form of the promise of all to respect the convention. The point would also be to showcase a partnership for all those countries that would equally benefit everyone. In order for it to be efficient, it is important for every country to agree and to take part in the debate. If an agreement of this type is concluded, it would bring back some peace in the zone, and would have almost instant effects because the area really needs organisation. This would help bringing back peace, stability, safety, security and freedom of navigation in the South China Sea. It would also allowed countries to focused on others subject such as piracy and smuggling. So, they could all corporate in fighting against those and developing their economy. To conclude, it is important to establish an organisation based on the model of the United Nation, but which would be specific to the South China Sea. Their main mission would be to focus on keeping peace in the area.

Révision constitutionnelle préoccupante en Corée du Nord

Kim Jong-un a annoncé l'inscription permanente de « la politique de construction de la force nucléaire » en tant que « loi fondamentale de l'Etat », dans la constitution.

Pyongyang justifie cette mesure en invoquant la menace que feraient peser la Corée du Sud et les Etats-Unis sur son intégrité territoriale. Kim Song, l'ambassadeur nord-coréen envoyé à l'Assemblée générale des Nations unies, a dénoncé « l'hystérie continue des États-Unis et de leurs alliés en termes de confrontation nucléaire », conduisant, selon lui, la péninsule « vers une situation militaire au bord d'une guerre nucléaire ». Un nouvel essai nucléaire pourrait avoir lieu prochainement, éloignant la perspective de toute dénucléarisation du pays.
